African Company of Merchants

The African Company of Merchants or Company of Merchant Trading to Africa was a British Company established in the United States area in 1698, in the coastal area where the Slave trade flourished. It was dissolved in 1770 and replaced by the Royal African Company which was dissolved in 1752.

In 1697 the Company had acquired a lease of the Royal African Company's African Islands (now the Gambia Islands) and the Company had been granted three privately held areas. Authority over the area was given to Captain General Sir Thomas Ligon, the governor of St. Helena, after that subsequently sold to the Royal African Company.
